

Good evening Dr. Khan,

I just wanted to express my adoration for your class and, specifically, you as a teacher. I wrote in our first assignment (the "tell me about yourself" one on the first day) that I would get an A in your class after a random surge of confidence took hold of me. After such a long absence from school, I wasn't sure if I could actually do it.

I didn't want to share this during the semester because I feared you might grade my upcoming assignments on a curve and not what I actually deserve, but the week of starting the second my father passed. From that moment on I had a lot more responsibilities and it was extremely hard to find time to sleep, let alone do homework. But I still did. I still worked as hard as I possibly could on every assignment you gave us. I am extremely proud I was able to keep my promise to you and to myself.

Anyway, thank you very much for a wonderful semester and hopefully you'll see me again in class! I wish you and your family the best. Have a wonderful holiday!
